

Kite-making Workshop

Last Friday, Katie and I led a workshop at a children's centre. When we arrived, the children welcomed us and we started teaching them how to make kites. The children felt excited and they enjoyed making kites.

Suddenly, a girl screamed loudly, "Oh no!" A naughty boy poured a whole bottle of glue on her hands and paper. She got glue all over her hands! She felt so sad and she was going to cry.

After that, the girl rushed to the toilet and cried loudly. Katie and I were worried so Katie went to the toilet and helped her clean up. I was angry and told the boy that he needed to apologise to her.

In the end, the boy said sorry to the girl and he shared his kite with her. From this incident, I learned that it is important to treat others with kindness and respect. I should be kind to everyone.
