

An annoying day

Last Friday, Katie and I were preparing the paper, tape and glue to teach children how to make kites at 4 p.m. So far, they were enjoying the tutorial lesson.

After 15 minutes, while the other children were making the kites, a naughty boy poured glue all over a girl's hands. It even got onto some of the supplies– what a mess!

Then, after 5 minutes, the girl started crying because some glue got on her favourite shirt. Katie calmed her down and went to the bathroom to clean up the mess that the naughty boy had made.

I told the naughty boy that he had made a huge mistake and to never do that again. I also told the boy to apologize to the little girl. Besides, I punished the naughty boy. I didn't let him get on with the kite-making project. Katie and I continued to teach the children how to make the kites.

That's the day I learned how to take care of children.
