Last Saturday, I stayed at home. My final examination was over and I was so excited to play my favourite video game. No one disturbed me as my family went out for a walk.

Two hours later, I reached the final level. Suddenly, my phone was ringing when the doorbell rang. 'Oh, no! I left my phone in the bedroom,' I murmured. So, I paused the game and I opened the door for Dad. Then, I ran to my bedroom to pick up the phone.

It was Sandy. She wanted to talk about Daniel's birthday party next week. I was still talking to Sandy when Dad entered the living room. He switched off both the TV and video game. I could do nothing but looking at the black screen. I was shocked and started to cry.

After a while, I calmed down. I learnt a lesson that I should not leave the TV and video game on when I walked away.
