

A terrible accident

Last week, Ryan had an accident. That morning, he forgot to set the alarm clock, so he was in a hurry. What made things worse was that the lift was out of order. So he took the stairs anxiously, hoping he wouldn't be late for school.

When Ryan wanted to cross the road, the pedestrian lights did not turn green for a while. He was worried he would be punished by teachers, so he decided to ignore the lights and run across the pedestrian crossing. “Ah!” Ryan shouted, he was struck by a taxi and he fell down on the ground.

Ryan was injured and his right leg was extremely painful. Luckily, the taxi driver called an ambulance for him. He was sent to the hospital immediately.

Ryan broke his leg in the accident. He was hospitalized for a month. Since he could not go to school, his classmates and teachers went to the hospital and visited him. Their visits made him feel less lonely.

Now, Ryan knows it is wrong to ignore the traffic lights. Besides, health is wealth. He will not do anything that is harmful to his health.
