

An Unforgettable Day

Last week, my mum and I went to the 5th Green Exhibition because I needed to do a project about saving the Earth. I went to the exhibition to get some ideas for my project. There were so many people and it was crowded.

There were a lot of booths. I visited a booth which was about tree-planting events. I thought it was meaningful so I signed up for it. Then, I saw a booth which was about recycled materials. It taught us to how to use toilet rolls to make pen holders. It was interesting and I tried to make it at home.

After that, I saw a robot display which was made of drink cans. It was beautiful and huge. Suddenly, a naughty boy came to it and he wanted to have a can of the robot. He removed the can from it. It fell down all of a sudden and it hurt me. The boy ran away and the organizer thought I did it. I said, 'No! Not me!' After that, he watched the CCTV footage and found out a boy did it.

In the end, the boy's mum and the boy came back and said sorry to us. The organizer did not blame him and said, 'Oh, it's ok! Next week, I will make a new one. Would you come to help me?' He replied, 'Yes, I will!' That was an unforgettable day!

In this incident, I learnt that I must be careful and I should not touch any exhibits.
